This house, the architect's residence, includes the kitchen, three bedrooms, and utility areas on the ground floor, with a lounge area and two studies on the first floor and a sleeping area, bathroom, Turkish bath, and roof terrace on the second floor. Located on the water on IJburg Island, the house is clad in aluminum panels on one side and fully glazed on the other. A service core clad in wenge wood containing closets, toilets, and a dumbwaiter, as well as cabling, rises up through the interior. Double-height spaces were created for the dining area, first floor living room, and second-floor master bedroom. The architect designed the furniture, shelves, bathrooms, benches, cabinets, fireplace, and dining tables.
